

Ping An of China Asset Management Fund Emerging Market Income Fund

Risk Disclosure

- Ping An of China Asset Management Fund - Emerging Market Income Fund (the "Fund") aims to achieve absolute return from investment income and long term capital appreciation by primarily investing in bonds, debt securities, convertible instruments issued by government, government agencies and/or companies having their main operations in emerging market countries, denominated exclusively in hard currencies and/or local currencies.
- The Fund may invest in (i) debt securities rated below investment grade or unrated; (ii) fixed-income securities with loss absorption features including contingent convertible securities and senior non-preferred debt which are subject to the risk of being written down or converted to ordinary shares upon the occurrence of trigger events resulting in a significant or total reduction in value; and (iii) asset-backed securities and mortgage-backed securities, all of which are typically subject to higher default, volatility and liquidity risks. The Fund is also subject to other risks associated with debt securities (e.g. interest rate, credit rating and downgrading, valuation, convertible bond and sovereign debt risks) and is exposed to RMB risk.
- The Fund's investments are concentrated in debt securities of emerging markets which may involve a greater risk than developed markets and the likelihood of a high volatility.
- The Fund may use derivatives for investment, hedging and efficient portfolio management purposes. Use of derivatives may expose the Fund to significant losses.
- There is no guaranteed dividend payment. Distribution may be paid out of capital which amounts to a return or withdrawal of part of the amount of an investor's original investment or from any capital gains attributable to that original investment and may result in an immediate decrease in the NAV per share.
- The investment decision is yours. You should not base your investment decision on this factsheet alone. Please refer to the Fund's Hong Kong Offering Documents for further details, including the risk factors.

Investment Objective

The Fund aims to maximize total returns on a rolling twelve month basis with target levels of volatility comparable to various fixed income asset market conditions by investing in debt securities of emerging market countries. The Fund aims to achieve absolute return from investment income and long term capital appreciation.

Review

The Fund returned 0.30%[^] in February, better than the benchmark, primarily due to overallocation in the consumer, communication, and financial sectors. The yield of 10-year US Treasury bond increased from 3.91% on January 31st to 4.25% on February 29th. Additionally, the US Dollar Index rose from 103.3 to 104.2. The US economy remains relatively strong: In terms of inflation, while it continues to trend downwards, Consumer Price Index (CPI) exceeded expectations for both December and January, and Producer Price Index (PPI) for January also significantly surpassed market forecasts. On the employment front, the US had 9.026 million job openings in December according to the Job Openings and Labor Turnover Survey (JOLTS) report, surpassing the expected 8.75 million and unexpectedly reaching a three-month high above 9 million. The figure for the previous month, November, was also revised upward from 8.79 million to 8.925 million. Non-farm payroll employment exceeded expectations in both December and January, with the January data nearly double the economists' forecast. Average hourly earnings for US employees continue to rise, and the unemployment rate has remained at a cyclical low of 3.7% for three consecutive months. The US labor market remains robust. Furthermore, the statements from the Federal Reserve have poured cold water on expectations of an interest rate cut in March. With strong economic data and adjusted market expectations, by the end of February, the market has largely discounted the possibility of a rate cut in March, while the probability of a rate cut in May has reduced to around 20%.

Outlook

We maintain our previous view that the risk of a recession in the US remains low, and the Fed is expected to achieve a "soft landing" for the economy while maintaining reasonable control over inflation, but with insurance interest rate cut. In the short term, US Treasury yields will continue to fluctuate, but the upside potential is limited, while the downside potential relatively higher.

The delay in market expectations for a Fed rate cut has led to a strengthening of the US dollar since the beginning of the year. This trend has put short-term pressure on emerging market bonds, with net outflows of funds from the beginning of the year until the end of February, resulting in a 1.38% decline in the Bloomberg Emerging Market Investment Grade Index. However, both US and emerging market economic data have surprisingly shown resilience, while emerging market inflation continues to trend downwards. For fixed income assets in emerging markets, the next month's trend will depend more on US economic data, but over a 3-6 month horizon, the Fed is expected to embark on an interest rate cutting cycle during the year, which will create space for interest rate cuts in emerging markets. At the end of February, the yield to worst of the Bloomberg Emerging Market Investment Grade Index was around 5.55%, which is at historically high levels, making it an attractive valuation. When there is a correction in emerging market bonds prices, it may present a good opportunity for positioning.
